

How our new strategy will help parish life

1 | making disciples

WE aren't just interested in getting people to come to church. Our calling is to create disciples whose whole lives will reflect their faith. So our plans will include:

● Engaging disciples in prayer, worship and study

We'll be encouraging individual and corporate prayer, in churches, homes, schools, colleges and workplaces, modelled by clergy and lay ministers, and resourced through training, mentoring, coaching, retreats and pilgrimage and spiritual direction. How could your parish use these resources to promote prayer?

We'll offer a spiritual rule of life (a common pattern of prayer and study) for disciples of all ages of backgrounds.

Each parish will be encouraged to create new Christian disciples, through offering appropriate worship and teaching for those new to the faith, by nurturing existing believers. Accessible teaching from a range of discipleship tools will be available, supported by diocesan staff.

● Engaging disciples with the life of the Church

There will be a proactive and systematic approach to vocations (lay, ordained, self-supporting and stopendiary), leading to growth in numbers and quality.

Those who are exploring vocations and ordinands will be prepared for what a re-imagined Church might look like, and may be placed in challenging parishes where leadership and teaching skills are developed. Who in your parish might benefit from this?

There will be a lay ministry framework developed to work alongside existing licensed lay ministers (ie. Readers). This will include lay pioneers, pastoral assistants, worship leaders and more.

It will involve your parish identifying those with appropriate skills, offering them training and accountability.

● Engaging disciples in the world

We want to develop discipleship that is engaged in the responsible stewardship of personal, church and society's resources. It encourages a view of faithful stewardship which embraces our entire lives.

There will also be support and encouragement for those Christians acting in the public sphere: this means in families, communities, workplaces, and public life.

It may also be appropriate to raise the profile of public theology through a diocesan School of Mission.

2 | growing churches

WE want all of our churches to grow, numerically and spiritually. We also want congregations to grow in confidence within their communities. So our plans include:

● Churches supported for engagement with the community

There will be a renewed visitation system, including a survey of each parish. This is to help support and challenge parishes, discover what training congregation members need, and to oversee the work of clergy effectively.

We'll provide ways in which parishes can develop a vision for mission, including Mission Action Planning, the Rapid Development Programme, and Leading Your Church Into Growth. Support will be offered to worshipping communities without a church building.

Support for parishes will include helping congregations to write bids and manage projects to develop their buildings and activities, so they can use their space to help their local communities.

There will be a priority on expanding work with children and young people, and increased awareness of the difference between generations.

And there will be support for parishes to develop excellent communications, written and online, to challenge misconceptions about the Church, and to promote what local churches are offering.

● Ministers trained for engaging with the wider community

We're training our ordinands and Readers through colleges and courses that encourage mission and Christian community engagement. That includes the new Portsmouth Pathway, which provides training rooted in the reality of parish life.

There will be a focus on discipleship, preaching, leadership, practical church matters, ministry in schools and colleges and social engagement. And we will help ministers to explain the faith effectively, to a world that has largely switched off from the Christian message.

● Churches structured and resourced for community engagement

We want to find the right organisation for our churches and parishes that will promote mission.

That might involve grouping churches together or working ecumenically to ensure mutual support. In some cases, groups of churches may share a vision, ministry and administration, but have different

THE challenge facing our diocese is how to reverse a trend of long-term decline in church attendance.

There was a drop of 11.5 per cent in the number of people coming to Church of England churches in south-east Hampshire and the Isle of Wight between 2001 and 2011.

It also involves re-thinking our mission in areas where we are weakest: in densely-populated urban and remote areas, areas of high deprivation, new housing developments and where there are large numbers of young people.

We need to minister differently and change rapidly to reverse this historic decline, and our lack of engagement with younger people.

That's why we've identified these four areas in which our desire to live, pray and serve can be worked out across the diocese: making disciples, growing churches, learning for life, and transforming society.

Reallocation of existing resources, and the setting aside of £200,000 of reserves has allowed us to create a new style of pioneering ministry, which will focus on the hardest-to-reach areas, new housing and working better with young people. We're also bidding for money from the national Church to expand this pioneer team.

Within the next five years, we expect to have developed at least six new expressions of church, each with between 50 and 100 worshippers, and to have moved the diocese from numerical decline to numerical and spiritual growth.

Part of this work includes analysing our resources, in terms of finance, property and people, and how to deploy those resources effectively. It may involve looking at sustainability of parishes, prioritisation of areas for mission investment, a review of structures and funding of diocesan resources.

We will consider and act on our responsibility to demonstrate wise stewardship of the earth and the resources that we are given.

ONE way that we hope to make a real difference in our diocese is by the use of pioneering ministers to create brand new worshipping communities.

Both lay and ordained pioneer ministers will be recruited and deployed to think differently about ministry and mission.

One advantage they can have is that by being freed of traditional parish responsibilities, they can focus on new ways of evangelism, creating disciples and engaging in mission.

We have already appointed a new Dean of Pioneer Ministry, Canon Peter Hall, who will lead this team.

It will include three brand new pioneer ministers, who will serve in the Leesland area of Gosport, the PO9 area of Havant, and the Milton area of Portsmouth.

Two current parish priests, the Revs Connie Sherman and Philippa Mills, will continue to offer pioneer-style ministry in the new housing developments to the west of Waterlooville and in Whiteley respectively.

We are also appointing a curate with pioneer responsibilities in Portsmouth, and have already recruited a pioneer ordinand, who will train specifically in this area.

We have asked the Church Commissioners for another £750,000 to support this work. If this bid is successful, more pioneer ministers can be recruited.

3 | learning for life

WE are a pilgrim people on a journey, and we continue to develop our faith as we mature. This affects our view of adult and children's education:

● Equipping people for lifelong learning as Christians

We want to provide a living encounter with God, involving prayer and service for all learners (not just 'learning about' faith).

● Developing a Christian vision of education

We want to articulate the call from God to engage with both church and community schools and colleges, to bring about a Christian education, and also the formation of communities of faith and learning.

We want to develop schools and colleges as missional communities, places of encounter with God, and vehicles for the education of individuals and the transformation of society.

We'd like to help parishes re-imagine the purpose of their engagement with schools in terms of ethos, relationships and life skills, as well as worship and governance.

And we want a proactive approach to the government's programme of recreating schools as academies.

● Christians contributing to local education

We want to assist in the clear articulation and living out of Christian narratives, ethos and values in schools, colleges and workplaces. We want to support parishes in engaging with toddler groups and pre-schools.

And we want to be proactive in developing and encouraging a vocation to teaching, across all ages.

4 | transforming society

WE are called as Christians to help transform our society for the better, by providing an alternative world view, and making a difference in our local communities. So our plans include:

● Promoting the Common Good

We want to support each local church to promote the common good for everyone, drawing in others to this work through social engagement. Our new church communities will include those with a 'social enterprise' model.

We want to promote community stability, investing in community life and human relationships, seeking out the lonely and marginalised, to give them help and bring them into a supportive community.

We want to clearly and strongly articulate the role of faith in the public sphere. We want to influence decision-makers, ask and tackle the difficult questions, and prophesy about what a just society should look like.

We want churches to be trusted partners for open and inclusive debate about our local communities. How could you work with community groups in your area to promote discussion about the future of your area?

● Equipping people for social transformation

We want to enable people to witness and serve in family, work, community and social settings. We want them to promote the values of the Kingdom of God as a radical alternative.

● Informing and transforming

We want to resource and facilitate active specialist advisers to help parishes. We also want to create and sustain effective networks for areas of public interest, such as environmental concern, urban and rural issues, and disability.

We need to raise awareness, develop ways of acting, and equip senior staff, deaneries and parishes for effective social engagement.
