

Seedlings

- It has been said that seeds and seedlings are a symbol of hope, or faith in the future. Things may be hard at the moment, but better days will come!
- Planting seeds is a statement of commitment, that we are going to be there to water and nurture them, and provide all we can for them to flourish.
- It can also be an act of defiance, that however dark the world might seem, we choose to believe in a better tomorrow.
- As teachers and school staff, we do this every day. We sow seeds of hope, resilience, curiosity and courage. We create the right conditions and believe that growth is happening, even when we can't see it. Some children blossom immediately, others need careful nurturing before they start to flourish. We persevere, because we believe that the seeds we sow now will bear fruit one day.
- Our work matters. Every small act of kindness, every time we choose to believe in someone, or invest time in them, we are cultivating the future and making a difference!

“To plant a garden is to believe in tomorrow.”

Audrey Hepburn
